The heroine with her bang disturbed by the stress of her emotions and her handkerchief rolled up in her hand used to seize the back of the gilded wicker chair and, staring into the audience, await the first notes of "Le Reve apres le Bal" played on muted violins when the musicians, interrupted in their game of pinochle, had clambered up from their subterranean retreat under the stage. To the music's suggestion of distant galety she would murmur something about the eld days at Etretat. Then, baffled in her struggle to get a hold on the social ladder, she used to ask with anguish that dear old question: "Why, oh why should there be one law for women and another for men?"

But they do that differently now. There is no longer any difference be-

There is no longer any difference between the law for one sex and that for the other. The "Francillon" motive sounds too strongly now in all dramas of marital disagreement. What is sauce for the goose is also suited to the gander, and violations of the law are punished with the exactitude of the Mosaic dispensation. There was new proof of the

AT METROPOLITAN

Handed Out in a New Play Opera Revived Brilliantly After Seven Years of Retirement.

Metropolitan Opera House last night with apparently more prospects of being received into popular favor than it had when it was given here on previous occasions. The work was first heard in this country in Philadelphia and in Nev York it was introduced by the composer at the Metropolitan on October 16, 1902, in a disastrous season mismanaged by himself. Mr. Conried revived it in the season of 1907-08 for the gratification of Mme. Emma Eames, who was enamored of the title role. Mr. Caruso and Mr. Scotti were associated with her in the production, but the public remained cold.

"Iris" is an ambitious work and per-

Apair from the desire of the heroine to get out of Brooklyn she had excuses for her revolt. She was really suffering under a had case of Brooklyn. The troity seemed to run through her front hall and her husband would go to see the stock companies over their mate of econing home to dinner. So her step mether's insistent suggestion that she go over to Manhattan and visit, Lena Schmidt, now known as Flora Lerose, relied on fruitful soil. Had not her step-mether fed her child on a banana the result of her trip to New York might have been serious. The only heirs of Mrs. Haynes were her daughter, Mrs. Annette Wagner Sherman, wife of Harry Taylor Sherman, a real estate broker living at the Nevada apartments, and two sisters. The appraisal shows that Mrs. Haynes took care to prevent Sherman from sharing in her estate by putting the Pullman stock, left to her daughter, in the care for life of Dr. H. Fuller Rathbun, the decedent's physician. On the death of Mrs. Sherman the stock goes to Dr. Rathbun.
